Lightning Damages House and Tree

A series of electrical storms visited this section on the afternoons of Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Little loss was inflicted outside of haymaking operations on Saturday and Sunday, although the Saturday storm burned out a transformer at Norway so that light and power were withheld about nine hours.

During Monday afternoon's storm lightning struck Hermon Mason's house. A couch in the attic was set afire. Mrs. Mason discovered the blaze and called help who soon extinguished it.

During the same storm lightning struck an elm tree at the rear of Ernest Walker's house on Main street. Although the bark was torn off and the tree splintered a distance of some ten feet or more, it is thought that it can be saved.

High winds did much damage in other places in the State.

For Cleaner Streets

Dear Editor:
In the Thursday, July 22, issue of The Citizen, I noticed that the Bethel Chamber of Commerce, with several local concerns, has issued a folder advertising the town's vacation attractions.

Possibly this same Chamber of Commerce or some other reliable organization, could plan some way whereby our streets could be kept free of the rubbish that accumulates and remains where thrown by thoughtless persons unless a strong wind lifts it and carries it to some clean yard, there to be cared for by the owner that takes pride in keeping his own "door-step" clean.

Our business men are trying to earn a living for their respective families and they can't devote their entire time to cleaning littered sidewalks and streets. And, that reminds me: Promises were made by these same business men that containers for waste would be placed for the convenience of the "drop-it-as-you-go" public.

Some of the sights we see along our streets are enough to make one take the "deep end."

Many Out of State Cars Visiting Maine

Of interest at this time of year is the number of out state cars on the highway. Observant citizens in Rockland this summer reported cars from every state in a period of two or three weeks. Making only a few inquiries we find that the following states and provinces have been represented so far, and the Citizen will welcome additions to this list. With travel at the present volume, Bethel should have no difficulty in meeting Rockland's record.

California	Ohio
Connecticut	Oklahoma
Florida	Pennsylvania
Georgia	Rhode Island
Illinois	Tennessee
Indiana	Texas
Iowa	Vermont
Kansas	Virginia
Kentucky	Wisconsin

Brann—Swan

The Penny Memorial Church of Augusta was the scene of a quiet but impressive ceremony. Saturday morning when Thelma R. Swan of Norway and Augusta became the bride of Earl A. Brann of Whitefield. The Rev. William R. Wood performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride was becomingly attired in a smart suit of white imported fabric with hat and other accessories in soft shades of beige and white. She carried an arm bouquet of carnations in white with tiny sprays in pastel shades. Her traveling costume was a printed dress of soft Clipper Crepe princess style with two-thirds length coat of blue in harmonizing shade with white accessories.

Mrs. Brann is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Rabideau of Norway, and formerly of Milan, N. H. She received her education in the schools of Maine and New Hampshire before coming to Augusta where she has held a responsible position at the Augusta State Hospital for some time.

Mr. Brann is the son of Nettie E. and the late Arthur M. Brann of Cooper's Mills and a cousin to Ex Governor Louis J. Brann of Lewiston. He received his education in the local schools and is a member of Sheepscot Lodge, I.O.O.F.

After a two weeks motor trip to points of interest in Southern New England and Canada the couple will make their home in Augusta, where the groom has had employment for several years.

An Unknown Quantity

Algebra would be easy if "x" were not the "unknown quantity."

You know what quality is, you know what value is... but you puzzle over what comes between them and price. The "x" in that problem is indirect distribution; lack of control of production.

There is no algebra in shopping from the ads in this newspaper. Quality offered is a known quantity. It is so plain that you see it. It is so tangible that you keep it.

Crippled Children Society Workers in County

Mrs. Haven Sawyer of Bangor, president of the Pine Tree Society for Crippled Children, announces that Mrs. Chesley Nelson has been chosen chairman of Oxford County and will have charge of the work in that district. She will be assisted by Mrs. Florence Haskell of South Paris who will cover the Paris districts.

County and local chairmen will work in conjunction with public health nurses in their districts in rounding up crippled children, and to increase the membership of the organization. These things, it is hoped, will lead to a more effectual Easter Seal Sale which is conducted by the Society annually and is the only means used to finance this program for Maine's crippled children.

Mrs. Sawyer and Mrs. Roselle Huddleston of Orono, a director of the Society, spent three days of this week with Mrs. Nelson, also a director, in Oxford County, organizing the work there.

Working also with Mrs. Nelson in Oxford County will be Mrs. Asa Pike who will act as local chairman in Fryeburg and Stow. Mrs. Roswell E. Hubbard is chairman of the districts of Sweden, Stoneham, Albany and the Waterfalls. Mrs. Harvey Granville of Kezar Falls will be chairman of Porter in Oxford County and Parsonsfield, Limonick, Cornish, Cornish, Limington and Newfield in York County. Miss Isabelle Stickney and Mrs. Albert Brooks are co-chairmen for the towns of East Brownfield, Denmark and Hiram.

J. H. Carter, Sr., has returned from Newton, Mass.

Lightning Strikes E. Bethel Church

The church at East Bethel was damaged some by lightning Monday afternoon. A bolt struck the chimney, scattering bricks over the yard, went down the chimney, ripped off plaster near the chimney, threw the first elbow in the stove funnel into the wing pews (plentifully full of soot, too) went along to the elbow over the stove, took that section and the cover off the stove too, ripped up the floor and linoleum behind the stove, threw baseboard quite a distance off, took a splinter out of the floor behind the other stove and went out into the entry, took the base board off, and the clapboards off on the outside. Ashes from the stove were blown over the carpet and the church was full of smoke for a short time.

Six-Year High in State Farm Bureau Membership

Oxford County, with 1,057 Farm Bureau members on June 30, contributed significantly to the highest total membership in the past six years, according to R. C. Dolloff, county agent leader in the Maine Extension Service.

Membership in the state on that date was 13,123, an increase of 1,486 over the corresponding date a year earlier, Dolloff said.

Highest county membership, and greatest increase over 1936, was shown in Aroostook County, with 1720 members, 661 more than last year. Other high counties were York, Penobscot, and Oxford. Significant gains over last year were made in Oxford, Piscataquis, Penobscot, York, and Waldo counties, Dolloff declared.

Increases in membership were reported by 12 of the state's 14 county organizations.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

SPECIAL PICTURE HOBBIES

ONE of the attractions of the hobby of amateur photography is that it provides an almost unlimited number of hobbies within the hobby; as many, in fact, as there are kinds of things that the eye can see. Ships, flowers, trees, clouds, locomotives, colonial architecture, historical monuments, gargoyles, machinery, babies, horses, dogs, cats, birds, insects are only a few subjects which have their devotees as special picture hobbies. Enthusiasm for photography combines with the collector's instinct, resulting in albums of photographs of the chosen subject that are a source of pride, pleasure and instruction.

In addition to the enjoyment of making the photographs, the value of a special picture hobby is that it usually leads to an accumulation of knowledge about the subject that is educational and broadening. If the photographer starts making pictures of flowers, he soon discovers that there are many things about flowers that he never knew before. He is likely to become quite a botanist. So with ships. He is likely soon to be studying up on marine architecture and enjoying it.

Above is an amateur photograph from the album of an insect specialist. This is a hobby which affords him the extra enjoyment of walks into the woods and fields in his hunt for specimens. He photographs them on the spot and captures them to take home for indoor study. He has become an amateur entomologist. Now he really knows about "bees' knees," "butterflies' eyebrows" and how many legs a caterpillar has. He finds that photographing insects in the open fields, garden or woods, is really a sport. Some kinds you can stalk successfully but he tells you that, more often than you would suppose, you have success by lying in wait for an insect to come within lens range and pose itself on flower, leaf or twig on which you have focused. If you locate yourself in a place where there are plenty of them, it won't be long before one of the multitude hops or flies into position in front of your waiting lens. Of course, if you do not have a close-focusing bellows camera, you should use a portrait attachment in order to get a large image, and in either case you will usually need to have an enlargement made from the important part of the negative.

The exposure should usually be twice that given regular outdoor scenes with the same light conditions. Being close to the subject there is less light reflected, and, as detail is essential, it is better to double the exposure time, and also to use a small stop. Your camera should be stationary on a support. You must expect some failures because of the refusal of an insect always to stay in position long enough for the required exposure, but that adds to the value of the successful pictures.

Grasshoppers, bees, spiders and their webs, the praying mantis and the butterfly offer good opportunities; so does the wasp's nest, if you care to take a chance.

The prosperity of a community is largely dependent on the success of its local industries. Busy mills and factories are likely to indicate increased taxable property, larger payrolls, more money for necessities and luxuries.

In times when the mills are closed and regular income suspended community prosperity suffers. The results of this loss of revenue can be minimized by greater home town loyalty. It will be found that the habit of buying away from home is not good business and may be more expensive. Home stores can and usually will try to get what you want if they do not have it ready for you.

Air Rendezvous at Augusta Last of August

A new, nationally known two-place airplane and flying instructions or $1,000 in cash if the winner prefers will be given away at the Maine Aero Rendezvous at the State Airport, Augusta, August 28 and 29. Officials of the 15 year old Maine Aero Club which is sponsoring the meet—a goodwill gathering of pilots and plane owners of the Atlantic Seaboard and Eastern Canada—are making arrangements for an expected attendance of 40,000 spectators during the two day show.

Pilots and plane owners from other States together with participants in the many aerial contests and exhibitions that will be staged, will be the guests of the club.

A banquet designed to appeal to the appetites of aviators, and an entertainment to be put on by professional artists are on the program for Saturday night, August 28, and the next day a real down-east clam-bake probably the largest ever prepared in Maine, will be cooked and served outdoors at Island Park.

The park is on a peninsular jutting into twelve-mile long Lake Umbagog, five miles from the State airport. Visiting seaplanes will be based at that lake and guarded at their anchorages day and night.

The State airport, with four smooth, oiled runways up to 2,800 feet long, and equipped with virtually all the latest airport devices, is considered one of the finest in the East. It is on top of a hill almost within the heart of the Capital.

Subject to the approval of the Aeronautical Division of the U. S. Department of Commerce several flying contests will be on the program during the meet, including races a try for an altitude record for light planes, acrobatics and formation flying.

Among the famed pilots being invited to attend the Rendezvous as the guests of the club are Al Williams Howard Hughes, Eddie Rickbacker, Dick Merrill, Tex Rankin, Jimmy Doolittle, and Clarence Chamberlain.

The general committee in charge of the meet consists of: Col. William N. Campbell of Sanford, finance chairman; Bill Turgeon of Lewiston, events chairman; Capt. Curtis F. Fowler of Augusta, publicity chairman; and Mayor Frederick G. Payne of Augusta, treasurer.

The committee on arrangements: Clifford Strange of Portland, Madeleine Suttle and Wesley Marden of Waterville, Charles Fortin of Lewiston, Irwin David of Auburn, Carl Croce of Skowhegan, Dean Cunningham of Farmington, and Charles Coolidge of Lewiston.

Governor Lewis O. Barrows of Newport and William H. Gannett of Augusta are honorary members of the arrangements committee.

A squadron of U. S. Army bombers will be there and the proper authorities are being contacted for the purpose of getting one of the crack Navy, Army or Marine Corps flying teams which have appeared at air meets in the western and central states.

Some of the planes expected at the rendezvous include a 32 place flying boat, and an $85,000 low wing monoplane owned by a Maine industrialist who uses it not only for speedy transportation between his plants in several parts of the United States but also as a flying office. It has 32 instruments and just about every safety factor that has been devised.

State police through the co-operation of Chief Wilbur H. Towle, a member of the club, will do traffic duty at the airport and members of the local American Legion Post, which has always taken an active interest in club activities, will assist in guard duty.

The Maine Aero Club has a membership of 321, every one of whom is vitally interested in aviation.

The rendezvous will be the first of its kind ever held in the East.

The University of Maine Extension Service and the United States Department of Agriculture offer blueprints for the construction of many types of farm structures, information as to the prints available, and their cost, may be obtained of the University of Maine Extension Service, Orono.

Lawn Party for Bryant Pond 4-H Delegates to State Camp

A lawn party for the benefit of two State Camp delegates, Barbara Cole and Ida Cushman was given Friday evening, July 23, by the members of the Woodstock Jolly Workers. The evening opened with everyone playing free Bingo with a prize for the winner of the most games. When a good crowd had collected the chairs were pushed back and the following program was presented: Friendship song, club members; tap dance, Gordon Doughty; tap dance, Patty Perham; ballet dance, Catherine Cummings; tap dance, Shirley Perham.

Mrs. Howe of West Paris presided at the piano. All dances were presented in costume and were well received by the audience. The program ended with club members singing the State Club Song.

After the program, a social evening of games and dancing was enjoyed on the lawn by the light of a gorgeous full moon. Before leaving all had the privilege of listening to some famous recordings by Caruso, Galle Curci and Calve. This music appreciation period was a rare treat as Miss Crockett is the possessor of a remarkably fine Victrola and a fine collection of records.

Refreshments of ice cream, cake and punch were on sale.

The lawn party closed with everyone singing "Taps."

Enforced Traffic Rules

The Tragedy of Repeal

Many people were lead to believe that repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment would bring about a much improved situation with regard to law enforcement and law observance. Already it is being forcibly demonstrated that not only is there no improvement, but as a matter of fact conditions are generally much worse. Statistics have been compiled showing a nationwide increase of 16% in motor car fatalities; an increase of 24% in the number of intoxicated drivers involved in accidents, and an increase of more than 55% in the number of intoxicated pedestrians involved in such accidents. Also, police records show the arrests of drunken drivers in cities have increased, for instance, 24% in Los Angeles, 300% in Philadelphia and 380% in Cincinnati.

The promised revenue from the sale of liquors has not been realized, but there has resulted an enormous increase in bootlegging.

THE LOW DOWN from HICKORY GROVE

Mamas, and sometimes papas, who think it is correct and not stuff, to let their 4 year old spring do just about anything that pops into his head, you know right away that they have been readin' a book by maybe some bachelor, on how to raise children.

And when you see this kind of youngster when he or she is 16, and who was allowed to grow up without a halter, they are mostly makin' trouble for their ma and pa, but then it is too late. And when they were around 4 and pokin' hair pins in the clock, and maybe lookin' cute to mama, they are now talkin' back at 16 and tellin' her what in what—and it is not so cute.

And down there in Wash., D. C., they been lettin' the young heads have full rein, and they are takin' the clocks apart and puttin' the wheels in new places. And when we wake up, we will find that things they been doin' are not so cute, and also won't work, and we should have put our foot down sooner, for out there on the front porch, the tax collector will be huntin' our door bell.

LIGHTING THE FUSE

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Falls, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems Inseparable from Local Welfare

The present Congress has been in session more than six months.
In that time it has passed a large number of bills—more than 90% of all measures are approved by an unanimous vote, as they are only of local importance and don't inspire arguments and debate. But most of the really big items on the calendar remain to be considered.
The real work has gone on, not on the floor of the House or Senate, but in the committee rooms, where leaders plead, threaten, argue and sweat.

The original Supreme Court bill is definitely dead. Administration floor leaders didn't even bring it to a vote—the mounting opposition to it in Democratic ranks, plus the stinging criticism it received from the Senate Judiciary Committee, sealed its doom. In its place a compromise has been offered. The compromise would authorize the President to appoint an additional Justice for each Court member over 75 (instead of 70) with the important proviso that not more than one extra Justice could be appointed in any one calendar year. This would give the President four extra appointments between now and 1940—but they would not be made if elder Justices retired. Theoretically the Court would not be permanently increased in size, inasmuch as when Justices over 75 retired they would not be replaced unless the Court had less than nine members; actually there could be several "extra" Justices appointed and sitting with those over 75 at all times. Opponents of the original bill are mostly opposed to the compromise and have organized a fil-buster.

Business Week thinks the PWA is dying, and recent events would indicate that is true. PWA activities have been greatly curtailed, and in a number of states no new projects are being undertaken.
Congress will probably approve appropriations for projects already planned, but there will be little new work anywhere.

There will be nothing new in taxation this session with the possible exception of laws to plug up loopholes in existing tax legislation. Senator LaFollette's proposal to widen the tax base (that is, reduce exemptions as well as increase higher bracket rates) did not pass, but it received a surprisingly large vote. Most authorities feel that a similar measure will be passed, of necessity, in a year or so.

It is doubtful if laws dealing with strikes will be passed. There seems to have been a change, according to most Washington observers, in the Administration's attitude toward labor and its leaders. They think the President is becoming less sympathetic with Mr. Lewis, that the CIO is gradually losing White House support, and that the Administration will take more of a middle ground. This reflects the widespread opinion that the general public is less favorable to the CIO than it was a few months ago. Recent events indicate especially that agriculture is strongly against the Lewis movement, fearing that he may try to unionize farm hands and establish wage levels that the average farmer cannot meet.

Before Congress adjourns (best guesses place that date as Labor Day) there will be a good deal of verbal fireworks, but it is very doubtful if any major bill of a revolutionary nature, with the possible exception of the Court compromise, will pass. The attitude of congressmen today is largely one of caution—they don't want to take any steps that will further distress business, and halt the recovery movement.

On June 30, the fiscal year ended.
The Treasury closed its books and struck a balance. The figures are interesting and significant.

During fiscal 1937, the government spent $8,001,000,000. This marked a decline from fiscal 1936, when $8,477,000,000 was spent. However, if allowance is made for the Soldiers' Bonus, paid in 1936, 1937 spending was greater.

Federal income was 23% higher than in 1936—$5,294,000,000.

The 1937 deficit was $2,707,000,000, as compared with a 1936 deficit of $4,261,000,000. The national debt soared to a new peak of about $36,500,000,000. Unpledged assets that, if considered, lessen the debt, include $1,000,000,000 in gold against which no notes have been issued, and $4,000,000,000 in recoverable loans owed by industry to government branches, principally the RFC. Foreign governments also owe us $11,000,000,000, but the Treasury does not consider this a recoverable asset.

Secretary Morgenthau recently forecast that the budget will be almost balanced in fiscal 1938, and that in 1939 income will exceed outgo, leaving a surplus that may be applied to reducing the debt. This year's deficit was the seventh successive one.

A sharp rise recently took place in future wheat prices. Reason: This year's crop will be materially smaller than was anticipated, due to stem rust damage.

Important wheat areas where it was anticipated that crops would run 30 or more bushels per acre will actually yield 10 or less.

An improved type of farm potato storage is described in University of Maine Extension Service bulletin 233, copies of which are obtainable, free, from the university at Orono.

When Water Freezes

When water freezes the ice has a volume about 9 per cent larger than that of the water from which it was formed. If water fills, or nearly fills, a closed space, and is allowed to freeze, the ice which forms will have a larger volume than the water, and as a result pressure tending to burst the container will develop. The pressure which may be developed increases about 30,000 pounds in change of temperature from 32 degrees Fahrenheit to minus 8 degrees Fahrenheit. If the container is strong enough to withstand a pressure in excess of 30,000 pounds per square inch or can stretch enough to increase about 9 per cent in volume, it will not burst, even if subjected to a very low temperature, says the United States Bureau of Standards.

Washington Letter . . .

A Congress harassed by the now dead Court issue and pending second New Deal legislation such as is found in the Hours and Wages bill and the slum-clearance measures being pushed by the Administration, is now in the middle of the last lap of a seven month session, without the enactment of a single piece of major legislation.
The hand of fate has been seen on more than one occasion during the current session of Congress directed seemingly at forestalling important Administration measures. The death of William P. Connery, Jr., chairman of the powerful Labor Committee of the House and the more recent death of Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Senate Leader, both carrying the President's fight for passage of Labor and Court reform measures have dealt severe blows to the Administrations plans.

Recommit Court Bills

Both Senators Hale and White of Maine voted to recommit all bills, amendments, etc., in connection with the President's Court reform plan to the Judiciary Committee.
This means virtual defeat of the plan, since it is doubtful if they ever will be brought from the committee, again. This is the President's first major defeat in Congress in his four and one half years in office. The next test of his strength or weakness with Congress will come in what is now termed in some quarters as his second New Deal program. The Wages and Hours Bill and the Slum Clearance measure. Whether these measures will be pushed to a vote in the next few days of this session is an uncertainty even in the minds of those seemingly close to the situation.

For Adjournment

There is a general undercurrent favoring early adjournment. The prospects of an adjournment before the middle of the month, however, seem somewhat remote, in view of the fact that much legislation remains to be enacted. This week will tell much of the story, and no doubt by the end of the week indications will be plain as to the way the legislative arrow will point.

Brewster in Maine

Congressman Brewster of the 3d district is in Maine. He will fly back upon notice of a call on any important matters. Oliver and Smith are remaining in Washington for the duration of the session.
Brewster and Oliver are planning to keep their offices open in Washington after adjournment, keeping part of their force here and part at home.

Oliver Before Committee

Congressman Oliver appeared before the Senate Committee having to do with Rivers and Harbors legislation in interest of dredging operations off Martin's Point and Spring Point shoals in Portland Harbor, last week. Senator White of Maine is a member of the committee.

Air Port of Entry

In an effort to get coordinated action on part of the various departments of the Federal Government in the matter of establishing an airport of entry for American and Canadian transatlantic air flights Congressman Oliver has written to the Labor, Commerce and Treasury departments setting forth facts and figures to show why a Port of Entry should be established in Maine's leading port city.
He takes the position that Portland is the logical and strategic point for the establishment of such a port of entry both as a matter of convenience and sound operation.

Pass Pension Act

The House this week passed H.
R. 5630 providing for pensions for veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer Rebellion Expedition to China and the Philippine Insurrection over 65 years of age, and increased pension for such veterans in need of constant attendance. The measure also provides for contract nurses in service during these wars.

Heroes

CARMELA TORELLI was ashamed of her father. And the tragedy was the greater because she also adored him.

By sheer mental brilliance, Carmela had risen from poverty to the competence of fifty-a-week, but when she stepped into the office each morning she was haunted by fear lest the mire of the squalid street in the section where she still dwelt might be clinging to the hem of her skirt.

To all her entreaties that they move to some pretty suburb, Pasquale Torelli stubbornly turned a deaf ear. He had saved a neat little sum in all these years, but he had known the days when he had been obliged to draw in his belt, and he refused to give up his work or move to more expensive quarters. So, of a morning, as Carmela left their three rooms in the overcrowded tenement house and stepped warily over the rough cobblestones, striving to keep her dainty footwork clean, old Pasquale often plodded close behind her, trundling his pushcart filled with fruit or vegetables.

Carmela hated that pushcart, even while she admitted to herself that it had earned their daily bread and clothed her in fine muslins while the other children in her neighborhood had worn coarse cottons.

Carmela was in love. Yes, with "the boss," Luigi Mangano, head of the big firm of Mangano & Cypriani, importers. She was his secretary, and her desk faced his in the private office.

He was handsome and distinguished-looking, was Luigi; she was sure he must be of noble ancestry. Who was she, Carmela Torelli, daughter of Pasquale-of-the-Pushcart, to long for the love of this man? Nevertheless, occasionally she would look up and find his eyes fixed on her, with an expression that made her tremble, even while she wondered at its sadness.

There came an evening when they worked late together. When they were getting ready to leave, as Carmela crossed the office to the washstand, she tripped over a small rug, and nearly fell. Nearly, but only that, for Luigi jumped up and caught her in his arms. And he kissed her!

The next second she was free, and he was saying miserably, "Carmela, I didn't mean to do it. Please forgive me and forget about it. I love you, but I never meant you to know it. Our paths lie as far apart as the two poles."

"Do you suppose I don't realize that?" she replied, all the more bitterly because her pride was struggling with the tingling joy of his kiss. "You have everything and you live in comfort and luxury; I live in the dingiest street in the city, and my father wheels a pushcart. What have we in common?"

"What, indeed!" he answered, with even greater bitterness. "Do you think that would hold me from loving you? You grew up in a dingy street, but you always had a roof over your head. Many a night I crouched in an alley corner or huddled in a doorway to keep from freezing. Sometimes I was so hungry I was tempted to steal. I educated myself, and I went to school in rags. And do you know what my father was? A crook! A gunman! Your father has a pushcart, but he's honest. Honest, Carmela! Honest! I'd give the world to have had a father like him. Do you think I'd ask any woman to marry me, the son of a crook?"

Suddenly Carmela's mental vision saw a glorified picture of old Pasquale; saw him as he had always tolled through the streets behind his cart, facing cold and sleet and rain, or wilting under a torrid summer sun; saw him, always smiling, shouting his wares in a cheerful baritone, even while he shook with an ague.

She remembered the years when, at the end of a hard day, he had entered the tenement kitchen and poured his earnings into her mother's apron. And she realized that the little peddler father, of whom she had been ashamed, was one of that vast army of patient and unsung heroes, who go gladly forth to battle each day, that the ones they love may not know want.

DOMINION GRATTAN, 1:59, crackpacer, is shown with Tommy Berry, top-flight reinsman of the Grand Circuit, which is at Old Orchard Beach for two weeks, with a brilliant cavalcade of 500 horses and 2,000 men. Paul Bowser, well-known Boston sportsman sponsoring the Maine big time harness card, is the proud owner of Dominion Grattan, with Berry his expert pilot.

At the same moment she knew that the man before her, Luigi, who had been so hungry that he "was tempted to steal," but who nevertheless had conquered temptation and probably crushed an inherited tendency to vice, was a hero of another sort. For what greater foe can man have to battle than gnawing hunger?

Her arms crept up about his neck, and of her own accord she kissed him, laughing a little hysterically. "If you won't ask me to marry you, Luigi, then I'll have to do the proposing myself. You're a thousand times more worthy of any woman than if you had been born in a castle, with a gold spoon in your mouth. Luigi, I love you."

"Carmela!"

And when, somewhat later, they wended their way through the streets where she lived, Carmela glowed with pride over the anticipated joy of presenting her sweetheart to her father—real men, both; each capable of appreciating the other's qualities.

Lobster

By ETHEL M. RICE

WNU Service.

"MOTHER Mason laid aside the partly darned stocking. Her hands dropped wearily into her lap. "If only I could regain my strength," she murmured. "This flu does leave one so weak. But I 'spose when my appetite returns—"

"Yes," encouraged father. "You'll be all right when you get on your feet again. Wish I could get something that would appeal to you—you know, something different."

His wife leaned forward eagerly, her lips parted as if to speak; then she closed them, and her head fell listlessly against the back of the chair. If only she dared mention it! But she must not. Father's meager wages could never stand such a strain. Mother was craving lobster!

"What is it, mother? You started to say something."

Mother Mason hesitated. "I—O Fred, —it's foolish for me to even think of luxury, but—well, there! I may as well admit it. I'm just longing for lobster!"

"Lobster! Well I'll be— Of all things, to—"

"O, I know, dad; it's out of the question, of course."

Father Mason sighed. "I'm afraid it is, little woman. This lack of work—No pay day for me this week, you know. Is there—can't you think of anything else?"

"No, dear, and I'm sorry I spoke. Just—just forget about the lobster, won't you?"

"Guess I'll have to."

Ten minutes later, Mother dozed in her chair. Father slipped cautiously into the hall. From the pocket depth of his well-worn coat he drew forth a small card and thoughtfully read the printed words:

Firemen's Banquet and Entertainment.

Evans' Hall.

Sept. 19. 8 o'clock.

Tickets $1.00.

A half smile curled his lips. "Humph. Been tryin' for the past six years to take that in, and every blamed year—Oh, well, Jim'll take it back. I'll tell him I need the money."

Half an hour later Mother Mason returned to consciousness, roused by a low chuckle. "That you, Fred? Guess I've been asleep." Suddenly mouth and eyes expanded to their fullest extent. "Fred Mason! Where d'you get that!"

Her husband grinned. "Oh, just a few extra pennies I've been savin' towards a Rolls-Royce. Now, no more questions. Just you eat it and enjoy it. There ain't much of it, and it's all yours."

Mother's eyes lighted. "O dad! If only you could realize how I've longed for it!" She glanced at the clock. "Dear me. It's time for my malted milk. P'raps I'd better wait a little while before I eat it."

"Well, just as you say. I'll put it out on the kitchen table till you're ready for it. Think I'll take a run over to Jim's for a half hour or so. The kiddies'll be home from school soon, so you won't be alone long."

As the front door closed, a stamping of feet on the back steps announced that the children had already arrived. A door slammed. "Oh! Mother! You darling! To save some for us!"

"Save some?"

"Yes. The lobster, mother! I've had only one taste of lobster in all my life! And Ronald's never had any!"

For a moment Mother Mason's heart rebelled. Then four arms were impulsively thrown about her; two kisses smacked on her forehead.

"I—I wouldn't tell Daddy about it, because—Well, there's not enough for all of us, and—Chew it well," she said.

Helen met Father at the door, a warning finger on her lips.

"Sh! Come quick. We have a surprise for you! Daddy, someone sent Mummy some lobster! Lobster! Think of it! And she saved a little for Ronald and me. Isn't that just like her? But, Daddy, dear, we just couldn't enjoy it unless you had a taste, too, only please don't tell mother, 'cause she might think we didn't appreciate it. She's upstairs now, and brother and I'll keep her up there while you eat it."

Something rubbed against Father Mason's ankles followed by a pleading "Mum!" Father leaned over and stroked the soft fur.

As she leaned over her father for the goodnight kiss she glanced quickly at her mother, then put her lips close to his ear:

"Was the lobster good?" she whispered.

"Bully," motioned Father.

Mother lovingly patted each baby's cheek, then her eyes sought Father's. He was absorbed in his newspaper.

The hour ticked by. Father laid aside his paper and drew his chair close to mother. His hand reached for hers.

"Tell me, little woman," he said, "how was the lobster?"

Mother's free hand closed over the big rough one, as she looked father squarely in the eyes: "Dee-licious, Dadsy."

Tools in Ancient Egypt
Many details of the building of the Pyramids of Egypt are still shrouded in mystery; perhaps will ever be. Yet it is known that the workmen who built these colossal piles of stone, that have endured for more than 5,000 years, worked with tools which we think of as modern implements. They used both straight and circular saws. Their cutting and fitting of the stones have been the marvel of architects for centuries. They also used solid and tubular drills, and knew and used the principles involved in the modern lathe. Both their drills and the cutting edges of their lathes were set with hard jewels of some kind, just as we point drills with diamonds. They had also discovered how to make their drills extremely hard, for the cutting marks show that while their drills could make a cut of a tenth of an inch at one revolution in solid granite there is no indication of wear on the drill.

Upper Jaw Not Hinged
The common belief among all nations where crocodiles and alligators are found is that these animals move their upper jaws rather than the lower when they open their mouths. This is a ridiculous idea to anyone who has examined the skeleton of one of these animals. The upper jaw is not hinged, says a writer in Pearson's London Weekly, but is built solidly into one piece with the upper part of the head, just as in other animals, and the lower jaw is hinged just as in man. The reason people believed these animals opened their upper jaws was that when lying on the ground the lower jaw could not be moved any lower, so the mouth was opened by raising the whole head and leaving the lower jaw still on the ground.
